Excerpt: .continued their warlike expeditions against Viterbo, even during the year 1232, when John of Poli was Senator. Although related to Gregory IX., the son of Richard Conti had espoused Frederick s side, and it is scarcely probable that he had been elected with the Pope s consent. He called himself at this time Count of Alba, having been invested with this Marsian territory by Frederick.¹ The attempt made by the Romans to render Latium subject to the Capitol deserves more attention. A new spirit animated the Roman people. As in ancient times, in the days of Camillus and Coriolanus, they undertook conquering expeditions against Tuscany and Latium. The Roman insignia, the ancient initials S.P.Q.R. on a red and gold banner, and the Roman national army, formed of the citizens and the vassals of the Campagna under the command of senators, were seen once more in the field.² In the summer of 1232 the Romans advanced to Montefortino in Volscian territory; the Pope, who had gone to Anagni in August, was even menaced from beneath the walls of his ancestral city. Gregory sent three cardinals with large sums of money to the enemy s camp, but they still continued their hostile interference with his enterprises in the Campagna.¹ For Gregory IX. was as active as Innocent III. in increasing the patrimonies of the Church. He took communes under his protection, and demanded the oath of fealty from their podestas.² He paid the debts of free...
